Student View

When students log in they see a similar view with all of the classes they are enrolled in, though their options consist of opening a subject and taking assignments that have been issued to them.

The subject overview provides teachers with a table of contents of topics and subtopics covered, as well as a media library with the book's multimedia resources all in one place. In addition, the "Manage Class" tab gives you control over adding and removing students and co-teachers.

As a teacher you can view the book to gain an understanding of what students see from their perspective, as well as access to all the tools they have, including the notebook, glossary, and immersive reader. You can also print sections if you wish, and assign reading and question assignments directly from within the content.

Tip: If you wish to see a more uninterrupted view of the book subtopics, use the teacher view, located on the bottom of the menu bar. This is much better for lesson planning!

The student view has the same tools on the left hand menu bar, which include a table of contents of the subtopic they are in, the notebook for active reading, a glossary of academic vocabulary, and the immersive reader (reading assistance) mode which allows for reading accessibility.

Dennine	The nature of markets
DD .	۲
0	Historically, a market was a physical place where people got together to buy and sell goods.
0	These markets still exist – like a fish market, a fruit and vegetable market or a cattle market.
Country .	market
6.0	Today, the definition of a market is much broader. It is where people who are willing and and the same	able to purchase a good, service or resource can carry out an exchange with those who are willing and able to provide that same good, service or resource. It is not always a physical place; it can be local, national or international.
	The market may be in a specific place (such as the spice market shown in Figure 1) and involve the exchange of goods and/or services for money. However, a market can also exist in many different places at the same time, where buyers and sellers may never meet, communicating instead via the internet, phone or any other method that allows them to agree on price and quantity of goods.

Teachers can create assignments and monitor student completion. Data connected to the assignment such as individual student performance and class trends can be viewed and analysed via the "Assignments" tab.

When you send an assignment, students receive notifications via email and within the platform that prompt students to begin the assignment. Students then complete reading and question assignments from within Kognity. After submission, students can view their scores directly.

You can monitor class and student engagement and performance via the "Insights" tab, which shows data taken from the textbook and questions.

The data you see in the Insights tab comes from students taking strength tests and battles in the practice centre and by completing section questions and assignments.
